Embarrassing Moments

When I graduated from college last year, I had three parties: one that we planned and two that we didn't plan!

My brother Ted emailed the invitations to 20 of our friends, but he got confused and said that the party was on June 25th, not June 26th. While I was reading his email later that day, I saw his mistake. Ted was working late that night, so I sent everyone a new email: "Sorry, the party's not on the 25th. It's the next night, the 26th!" Unfortunately, some of our friends didn't read the emails carefully.

Ted and I were having dinner at my house on Friday, June 25th, when we heard the doorbell. When we opened the door, we saw six of our friends. They looked confused when they saw our surprise. Ted was embarrassed at first, but then we told them what had happened, and everyone thought it was really amusing! We didn't have enough food for everyone, so we ordered pizzas from a restaurant near our house. We talked, told jokes, watched a movie, and had a great time!

The next evening, we had the real party! Sixteen of our friends were there – including our friends from the night before. This time we had Chinese food. We danced and listened to music, and everyone went home after midnight.

When I woke up on Sunday morning, I thought, "Hmm. Four of our friends said they were coming, but they weren't at the party last night. I hope they weren't confused by the second email!" Well, you can probably guess what happened later that evening. While I was having dinner, the doorbell rang. I opened the door, and . . . you guessed it! There were our four missing friends, ready for a party. I called Ted at his apartment. He ran to his car, drove to a Mexican restaurant, and ordered some tacos while I got ready for party number three!
