Listening A [Track 13]

Meg: Hi, Tim. How was your vacation?

Tim: It was excellent, Meg. We had a great time.

Meg: Where did you go? I forget.

Tim: We went to Florida . . . to Daytona Beach.

Meg: That's right. Was the weather nice?

Tim: It was warm and sunny. We went to the beach every day, and we went waterskiing and kite surfing.

Meg: That sounds fun. Have you done these sports before?

Tim: Well, I've been waterskiing since I was a kid, but this was my first time kite surfing. I fell a lot, but by the end of the vacation, I was pretty good.

Meg: I haven't tried either of those sports, but they both sound hard.

Tim: I guess anything is at first.

Meg: That's true. The first time I went rock climbing, it wasn't easy, but now I'm good at it.

Tim: Well, you're a lot braver than I am. I'm OK with water sports, but I've never wanted to try rock climbing. Just the idea of it has always scared me. My daughter loves it, though. She'll do anything. On this vacation, she went skydiving! My wife and I weren't happy about it, but she's 21 years old, and there wasn't a lot we could say.

Meg: My son is 17, and he wants to go skydiving, but I don't think he's mature enough for that. It's too dangerous, and he's not careful. Did I tell you that he broke his leg while he was snowboarding last year? I didn't want him to go because I know he's not careful . . . and sure enough, he wasn't. It was awful.

Tim: Well, my daughter's never broken any bones, but we still worry about her.
